Center for Long-term Care Reform President Stephen Moses has testified before the U.S. Congress, dozens of state Legislatures, and other prominent groups including the AMA and many financial industry associations. Moses' past work experience includes seminal research as a senior analyst for the Health Care Financing Administration and for the Inspector General of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Through frequent speeches to national audiences, hard-hitting reports, and its popular "LTC Bullets" on-line newsletter, the Center for LTC Reform quickly became the preeminent advocate for a rational and financially viable long-term care financing system.

The 2008 NATIONAL LTC CONSCIOUSNESS TOUR is a year-long, cross-country, grassroots effort run by the Center for Long-Term Care Reform. The Center is dedicated to ensuring quality long-term care for all Americans, and knows that time is running out to fix long-term care financing policy before it's too late to help the boomer generation.

Center president Steve Moses is hitting the road in a grassroots effort to spread the message of personal responsibility and rational long-term care policy across America. Mr. Moses will emerge from his "Silver Bullet" rig to speak at events to individuals, families, advisors and policymakers alike.

His message drives home the fact that public programs, which dominate LTC funding today, have set aside nothing for the future long-term care claims of the Boomer generation. Private insurance and home equity, both logical solutions, have been ignored by Boomers and policymakers. Something has to be done, and Steve Moses is dedicating the year to spreading the word and encouraging action.
